

How Can Shatterproof Security Window Film Protect Against Storm Damage?

U.S. Film Crew Article (Page 2 of 3)

When the glass breaks, it can fly at accelerated speeds and seriously injure anyone inside the house or anyone who's simply in the way.

Security window film is designed to prevent pieces of glass from falling apart. They hold the shattered pieces together, reducing the risk of injury and saving homeowners from having to clean up the mess.

Increases the security of your home

Intruders can be a problem after a storm hits. When Hurricane Ida hit New Orleans in August of 2021, court records show that more than 40 people were arrested for looting.

Aside from the damage that storms themselves can cause to homes, once the immediate threat is over and your boards have flown away exposing your home to looters, you may be in danger of losing the items you have secured in your home.

Security window film can be used to reinforce your home's windows and other glass surfaces to prevent opportunistic intruders from trying to break in after your home is vacated for the storm.

Thieves or looters may need a bat or a weapon to break your reinforced windows and may need multiple attempts to get in. You can protect your belongings and family from potential threats that come with natural disasters that can leave your home vulnerable.

Helps you avoid damage to your home

Windows are the most vulnerable part of any home, especially during a storm, and can cause instant damage to your entire home if left unprotected. Aside from damaged windows, extreme weather conditions are known for ruining properties.

Many homeowners who fail to properly protect their windows end up having to clean up and fix not only the damage to their windows but also the interior of their home.

Security window film can help ensure that your windows remain intact, prevent the glass from shattering, and also avoid any debris or rain from getting inside your house and damaging your property.

Security window film can be used to reinforce your home's windows and other glass surfaces to prevent opportunistic intruders from trying to break in after your home is vacated for the storm.